CYCLING ROUTES FOR ALL

Get out on two wheels to explore these great cycle trails, many of which take in historic attractions – we also highlight fabulous open-all-year campsites to stay at!

Sarn Helen, Wales

229.9 miles (in total)

Wales has such a rich seam of fascinating history, it seems rather a shame to single out just one area to explore. So a ride that encompasses both tales of yore and recent events seems only fitting – you can take in short parts of this trail for an excellent cycle.

Based on an old Roman route, Sarn Helen crosses Wales from north to south and traverses some of the country's most beautiful natural areas. Along the way, it covers everything from ancient stone circles and castles, to slate mines and steel mills.

Bannockburn, Scotland

9.1 miles

North Third reservoir itself isn't particularly historically significant, but the burn that runs from it is. The Battle of Bannockburn saw the Scots, led by Robert the Bruce, achieve a major win over the English in their fight for independence.

Often overlooked in favour of the higher peaks to the north, riding around the North Third delivers good climbs, and gives you the chance to traverse the river that gave its name to one of Scotland's most important historical events.

Barbury Castle, Wiltshire

10.8 miles

Appearing as a set of concentric rings from above, Barbury Castle is actually a pre-Roman hill fort set on the Ridgeway, Britain's oldest road.

The Ridgeway is, as the name suggests, an ancient limestone ridge, and the track originally connected the east coast to the west. Now it makes easy-access riding. The route is neither long nor technical – it's an easy-going, beginner-friendly ride, with a great deal of history crammed in along the way.

Talybont, Brecon Beacons

13.6 miles

There's plenty of great riding in the Brecon Beacons, and much of it is pretty hardcore. But you don't need to be a hardened veteran to enjoy the region.

This route keeps things relatively low level, yet doesn't short-change you on the 'out there' feeling that this corner of Wales does so well. It's a good stretch of the legs, but with just 700m of total ascent along its length, this is a relaxed ride.

Castlerigg Stone Circle, Lake District

16.1 miles

The folk who built Castlerigg Stone Circle, which sits among some of England's most dramatic mountains, certainly knew what they were doing. Unfortunately, whatever it was they knew has been lost in the mists of time, but a good guess is that it was a place to worship the sun and mark the turn of the seasons. The summer solstice would be the perfect time to undertake this ride, not only because you could start with a spot of sun worship, but also because the fells will be dry.

Amberley, South Downs

11.7 miles

Off-road biking doesn't have to be done on mountains, as the South Downs can prove. They might lack the rugged glamour of their taller cousins, but the Downs demand respect. Their smooth, rolling features disguise the fact that they require concerted effort to climb, but once you've gained height, they reward you with superb views and easy riding – although you'll want to look out for green chalk, especially in the wet. Fancy extending the ride? Look out for signs for the South Downs Way.

Bolton Abbey, Yorkshire

30.2 miles

Religion has played a large part in shaping the UK landscape. Monks, like those at Bolton Abbey in the 1100s, would have been responsible not just for the priory and buildings, but also for much of the farming that went on – creating fields and the tracks that we ride today. This 50km route follows some of North Yorkshire's lesser-known trails, taking in the monastic estate and stupendous views over God's Own County.

Houndkirk, Peak District

7 miles

This route packs all that's great about riding in the Peak District into one short loop, making it a fabulous introduction to what the National Park has to offer. Expect rocks, downhills that will test your skills, climbs that will stretch your legs and lungs, and great views. Oh, and a good pub at the end. It's not all grit, though; the ride finishes at Lady Canning's Trail Centre, guaranteeing a pleasant journey's end.

Aviemore, Scotland

18.8 miles

Aviemore could be the closest thing to a resort town that we have in the UK, and while it's best known for winter sports, the riding on offer here is superb all year round.

In the shadow of the mighty Cairngorms, this ride keeps things at a lower level, making it a safe bet if mountain weather does move in.

The route has less than 400m of ascent, so if you're after an all-day ride in the mountains that's family-friendly, this is a good bet.

Don't mistake this to mean that it's boring – zipping through the Rothiemurchus woods is sure to put a smile on your face.

Iron Keld, Cumbria
10.7 miles

Although Cumbria is home to some of England's highest peaks and finest trails, you don't always have to scale a mountain to get to the good stuff. If you're looking for your first taste of Lakeland off-road riding, Iron Keld is just the ticket. In fact, for the return on uphill effort, this descent has to be one of the best in the area. Topping off a cracking downhill is something every mountain biker needs to experience – riding on loose slate. Just watch out for punctures, though, because that slate is sharp.

SAVE MONEY WITH OFF-SEASON ACTIVITIES

So you want to get active on a winter tour, but keep costs down, too? Here are some great tips from our expert team!

Book ahead

Pre-book your activities online to make the most of potential discounts – many locations will offer visitors a few pounds off if you book your tickets in advance.

Buy a CampingCard

The ACSI card – which provides savings on low-season stays at campsites during the quieter months – doesn't just offer you discounts in Continental Europe, it can also be used at some sites in the UK. You can visit the website to find out more, at www.campingcard.co.uk/united-kingdom.

Check your phone tariff

Don't be stung by mobile costs if you are touring abroad – Brexit means that phone companies have been free to reintroduce a charge on roaming in the EU, so you could quickly rack up a substantial bill, particularly if you're streaming video or sending photos.

Check with your provider before you go on holiday, and look for campsites offering Wi-Fi if that's important to you.

Make pots of money

Allocate cash for each part of your trip, for example, dining out, any pre-booked activities, and so on. Use a budgeting app or online banking, such as Monzo, where you can create 'pots' for each item.

DIY food and drinks

Pack a picnic to enjoy during the day – it will help save money compared to buying from pricey cafés. Similarly, take a flask of tea, coffee or hot chocolate with you – that way, you won't be tempted to make tracks to the nearest teashop. For a savoury snack, you could carry hot soup or pasta instead.

‘Take a hot drink and you won't be tempted to make tracks to a teashop’

On your bike

Invest in a rack and take your bike with you on tour – that way, you can save money on transport, fuel and parking while getting active. When you're there, try taking one of our great cycling trails (p68)!

SIX OF THE BEST WALKING ROUTES

Hiking is a great way to explore on tour, and these are some of our favourite trails

1 Pembrokeshire Coast Path, Wales

There's so much excellent walking to be enjoyed in Wales, but for its glorious light and beautiful route, we're highlighting this wonderful National Trail, covering 186 miles of fine coastal scenery.

The path offers great variety, too, from the rugged Angle Village to Freshwater West trail, to the beautiful beaches to be found around Tenby on the route's Skrinkle Haven to Amroth section.

Delightful spots on the path include views towards Skomer Island, the Strumble Head Lighthouse and the Blue Lagoon, a flooded slate quarry now much favoured by high-divers.

■ Just off the A477 and less than six miles from Tenby (easily accessible by train, too), The Buttles Caravan Park is perfectly positioned for exploring the area. Open all year, the site is pet-friendly and offers good-quality amenities, with easy access to local shops and a welcoming pub.

2 Ribble Valley, North-West England

Ribble Valley is often missed by visitors pushing on to the better-known Yorkshire Dales and Lake District. That's a shame – they are missing out on the pretty villages and beautiful scenery of the River Ribble, the Bowland Fells and the Forest of Bowland Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty.

There is good walking here, too, such as the 5.5-mile Tolkien Trail, near Hurst Green – said to have inspired the writer – and the Clitheroe 50km loop, which begins and ends in the town.

Other highlights in the area include Pendle Hill, with superb views over the countryside, and a wealth of great foodie destinations – try the Spread Eagle Inn in the Forest of Bowland.

■ Ribble Valley Holiday Park is part of the award-winning Holgates group, offering high-quality amenities. From here, you're well placed for exploring the area.

Hadrian's Wall Campsite

3 Hadrian's Wall, Northern England

History buffs will love this slice of the past, stretching 73 miles across the north of England. Now a UNESCO World Heritage Site, the Wall was built some 1900 years ago on the orders of the Emperor Hadrian, as a defensive fortification.

Today, large parts of it are still intact, including Hare Hill, where one section reaches 2.7m high, and Birdoswald Roman Fort, where there are extensive remains. Housesteads Roman Fort is another impressive fortification and well worth a visit – its elevated position provides superb views and you can explore the barracks, the hospital and even the ancient toilets.

On the eastern side of the trail, visit the Roman Temple at Benwell, or walk the streets of a Roman town at Corbridge.

■ Hadrian's Wall Campsite, just off the A69, is ideal for visiting Housesteads Roman Fort. It's only 20 minutes on foot to the Wall from the site, which is in a lovely rural setting.

📍 hadrianswallcampsite.co.uk

4 South Downs Way, Southern England

A well-situated getaway from the major conurbations of the south, this delightful National Trail stretches 100 miles from Winchester in Hampshire to Eastbourne in East Sussex, and takes in beautiful landscapes along the way.

The Downs themselves, a range of grassy chalk hills, cover some 260 square miles, a fact that becomes most apparent on the final leg (from west to east), where you can see the stark white of the chalk cliffs at the Seven Sisters hills.

The trail makes for an excellent short walking or cycling trip. The paths are safe and the gradient is relatively easy. Highlights include wonderful views at Harting Down, Devil's Dyke and the Jack and Jill Windmills, and finally, Beachy Head Lighthouse.

■ Stay at the award-winning Concierge Camping, Chichester, which has large pitches and fantastic amenities, including luxury shower suites and an excellent shop and licensed bar.

5 West Highland Way, Scotland

This long-distance walking route works its way north from the lowlands at Milngavie, through the Loch Lomond & The Trossachs National Park and then on to Fort William, in the shadow of Ben Nevis. Covering some 96 miles, it gets progressively harder, so you might prefer to build up to tackling the northern stretches.

The 15-mile Drymen to Rowardennan section is great for seeing wonderful countryside without venturing too far north. It leads towards Conic Hill, providing breathtaking views, before dropping down onto the shores of Loch Lomond – a great introduction to a country that is full of dramatic landscapes.

■ Pet-friendly Lomond Woods, part of the Wood Leisure group, is a 15-minute drive from Drymen. The excellent facilities include fully serviced and hardstanding pitches.

🌐 woodleisure.co.uk/our-parks/lomond-woods

6 Exmoor, South-West England

There's exceptional walking all over the south-west, but the enjoyable thing about Exmoor is that several great routes intersect in this beautiful region.

These include sections of the South West Coast Path, the Two Moors Way, which drops down into Dartmoor, the Exe Valley Way, along the River Exe, and the Tarka Trail, which runs for 180 miles through beautiful north Devon.

Exmoor has plenty for walkers of all abilities, but we particularly like the 12-mile Dulverton to Tarr Steps loop. The famous Steps form a bridge – known as a clapper bridge – of unmortared stone slabs.

■ Zeacombe House Caravan Park, near Tiverton, is a good base for exploring Exmoor. The campsite is well serviced, with 50 extra-large pitches, modern showers and a shop.

GET FIT FOR HIKING

Shape up before you hit the trail on tour, says Julia Clarke of Advnture.com

Learning how to get fit for hiking will help to increase your stamina and improve your leg strength, so that you can walk further. Before you lace up your boots on tour, add these six tips to your routine.

Walk, walk and walk

Before you start climbing mountains, start adding more functional walking to your daily routine. Walk to work if you can, or take a walk on your lunch break. Walk to the shops, or park your vehicle a little further out when you're going into town.

To keep track, we can highly recommend investing in a fitness tracker or GPS watch – and wear your hiking boots, because this gives you a chance to break them in.

Take the stairs

Hiking tends to involve quite a bit of incline, so it's good to start climbing before you get to the trail. Skip the lift or the escalator and take the stairs instead.

When climbing the stairs, focus on engaging your hip flexors to lift your knee, and engaging glutes and quads as you drive your heel down to straighten your knee and come into hip extension.

Make sure you also take the stairs down, so you can practise engaging your quads on the descent, and in both directions, ensure that your knee isn't dropping inward.

Cardio plus strength

Hiking involves low-impact cardiovascular activity and leg strength, so make sure you train both of these. Any low-impact aerobic training will support you once you get on the trail – walking, swimming, cycling, elliptical, jogging, even yoga.

Aim for at least 60-minute bouts of low-intensity cardio several times a week.

You also want to train for leg strength, to help with endurance, reduce injury risk and decrease your chances of muscle soreness following a hike.

Consider pilates, yoga, working out with resistance bands and common exercises

A bit of preparation can pay dividends when you're out walking on tour

'Adding more daily walking for a few weeks will be good preparation for a short hike' for hikers, such as squats and lunges. Always consult a professional trainer or physical therapist for help in approaching these exercises safely.

Load your backpack

Even if you're only heading out on a day hike from your motorhome, you're likely to be carrying a backpack.

This might hold food and a water bottle, a waterproof jacket and other clothing, your map and compass, a first-aid kit and more. In other words, it can get heavy, fast.

Walking with a backpack can change your gait and posture, so you want your muscles to get used to the load. If you are new to hiking, begin carrying your day pack around town with a full water bottle, fleece jacket and waterproofs.

Increase the weight each week to give your muscles time to adapt, and do core strength exercises.

Gradually increase distance

Adding more daily walking for a few weeks will be good preparation for a short hike, so start with a route of no more than three to four miles. From there, you can slowly increase distances.

Similarly, if you're training for a longer hike, figure out how many miles you'll need to travel each day and work your way up to that distance. Make sure that you wear the boots you intend to walk in before you set off on your long journey.

Practise recovery

Although functional walking every day is fine, be sure to take rest days from any strength training, and don't plan on long-distance hiking seven days a week. Stretch after hikes and workouts with yoga for hiking and yoga for backpackers (see advnture.com), and check out other recovery tools, such as foam rolling and sports massage.

OUR TIPS FOR GETTING OUT AND ABOUT

On two wheels, on your feet or on the water – our team advise on how to get started

Secure your gear

If you're planning to take sports or other activity equipment with you while you're on tour, make sure you have somewhere safe to store it when you're pitched up onsite. A freestanding awning is ideal during rainy weather, and means you won't need to stash muddy kit in your lockers, but do make sure you lock any valuable items away if you're planning to leave the site, or during the night.

Sarah Wakely

Keep track

Smart watches have come down a lot in price and can help you keep track of your activity when you're out and about. It's amazing how quickly the steps mount up when you are wandering to and from the campsite washrooms, too!

Peter Byrne

Go for a hike or a run

A motorhome parked on a relatively empty site makes a great base from which you can go for a 5km or 10km walk or run. Don't be put off about running in the dark and cold: so long as you have the right clothing and a good head torch, it's actually fun.

You can usually see your vehicle from a long way off, which gives you some extra encouragement as you head for home, and you'll appreciate its cosy interior more than ever when you arrive back after your activity.

Peter Baber

Pack a kayak

Invest in a paddle board or inflatable kayak – that way, you can save on hire fees and enjoy unlimited time out on the water. Outdoor retailers have reasonably priced ones, or look for a secondhand option. Just make sure you have sufficient room and payload to carry it, though!

Jo Davies

On the buses

Public transport is your friend when it comes to getting active – why not take a train or bus from near your campsite, then walk or cycle back? It's a great way to see the area and get moving, too. For top sites with good public transport nearby, see next month's Practical Motorhome.

Simon Mortimer

Don't overdo it

Know your limits and don't overstretch yourself, physically or mentally. If the going is too tough or the terrain unsafe, be prepared to cancel. Equally, if the weather conditions are becoming too dangerous, don't be afraid to abandon your hike or cycle and head for home – there's always another day.

Paul Critcher
